

I think the two First Ladies that summoned entity/entities into the a White House brought about a generational curse on the country itself. DC is the hub of our country whether we want to admit it or not.

You yourself told me that Melvin informed you that people (he's known) have gone to work politically work in DC change like Body Snatchers or the movie, They Live.

At the end of the day, it's Satan who sows discord and division. Look at all the absolute shit that has happened in our past as a family. It opened the way for God to shine through. It's more than a church or people. Its existence. No matter what battles we've won or lost, it is preparing us (and all humanity) for the Appointed Time.

I'm curious to see if other countries and their histories include people of prominence performing seances, summoning, etc.

I also realized that God giving people visions fits within science (which shows how awesome God is). Since the past present and future all happen simultaneously and God sits outside Time and space,

Both the left and right never solves anything. All these groups do is accuse one another of the latest fad of the land. Hurling accusations is not something those who claim to be Christians do. Only one being accused humanity of that which we have been forgiven for.

3 John is a literal letter from John to Gaius and John is wishing that he individually prosper and be in good health.

Since the whole Bible is the Word of God, does John's wishes to Gaius include all of us? The idea is that God inspired the authors of the books to write down things and author the books.

Question is: Is 3rd John only a literal letter to a long dead individual? Is it only meant for all God's children that we prosper, be in good health, etc? Or is it both? Not binary but both ideas creating a mosaic of God's Word?

Here are the options: 1) God inspired John to tell Gaius that he wishes he prosper and be in good health and, spread the Word. 2) God inspired John to write this down and it for all God's children. 3) Both 1 & 2 are objective truth and there is no binary way of looking at it.

Why do I think there is a greater journalistic and historical-type story behind why my grandfather left the country he risked his life for multiple times? It doesn't make sense that someone who was made to fight and kill would give up. What are the facts?

- 1) Ambassador Bridge: He turned away a suspicious person. His boss and chain of command told him to let him through because they didn't want to be racists.
- 2) My grandfather: my mom revealed to me that he was sexually abused by his uncle.
- 3) There was some kind of federal court case my family was involved in.
 - a) It involved 9/11.
 - b) A minor child who was looking at sexually explicit photos of this child's schoolmates.
- 4) At some point in time, my grandfather's house was raided by federal officials. My mother spoke about it in the manner that she was there as a witness.
- 5) I remember my parents arguing about it and that my mother begged her father (my grandfather) to not leave; that there was still a way.
- 6) My mom told me that the federal government accused my grandfather of some kind of crimes against children and it involved his government-issued computer.
 - a) The charges were dropped because it was discovered that the alleged material in question was alleged to be put on the device by a 3rd party that is unknown or being withheld from me.
- 7) My mother told me this court case and the whole ordeal (overarching: like an umbrella company) put a lot of stress on her marriage with my biological father. I think it is what put them on the path to divorce. I want to be wrong.
- 8) My mother specifically told me that the entire event was because, "your grandfather had dirt on 9/11." She has stated that she was forced to sign a gag order and she spoke from a place of coercion and proselytization.
- 9) In December 2014, the federal government knew of the ordeal and putting the (amazing) miracles that God delivered to the side for a moment, I find it odd that they would help if they were paid and were given his laptop...(this is not that same laptop in question; I'm 99% sure about that)
- 10) In December 2014, two men (I think Chinese federal officers/men-in-black) came to my mother asking for the laptop. She told me there was no physical altercation but, I am not totally sure she is telling me the truth regarding that. I think it may be an attempt to protect my sister and I.
- 11) What I don't understand is why would my mother tell me that Anthony Maza is Anthony Gambino and his uncle is 'Dom' and Dom is the head of the Gambino family in New York. Why would my mom tell me that Tony (Anthony) prefers to (formerly) kill people with his hands? But, why would she not tell me what happened to my own family? I know something happened but I only have bits and pieces. I'm missing details. I need the truth. I cannot let this habit of withholding the truth trickle down to me when I, at some point, get married and have children. (Exodus 34:7; 20:5, Deuteronomy 5:9)
 - a) If whatever the truth results in something current event/political bullshit, I'm okay with that. I am okay if nothing happens. My health and the health of my future family hangs in the balance. (Because God sits outside space and time. It is like a mosaic; every piece has its place. But, we need every piece to complete it.
